FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

GLITZ & GLAM AT BALLSTON SPA FILM FESTIVAL 2010 PROVES TO BE BEST YEAR YET!

For two nights this past weekend, Ballston Spa turned into the Capital District Hollywood as 30 short films from around the world were screened by an audience of over 400 and seven judges, each with a long list of Hollywood credits.

Returning judges Daniel Fried, Daniel Pyne, and Anne Marie Lizzi each commented that the level of quality in the films shown here have increased each year, and was especially high this year. This year was the first year of judging for Larry Jackson – who discovered Julia Roberts, directed Buggs Bunny Superstar, former Exec VP for Miramax, and advisor in the creation of the Sundance Institute. He told the Ballston Spa Film Festival (BSFF) committee, “I thought you put on a terrific event for the community – and for the filmmakers – where you were well organized and your choice of films was really, really good in quality, variety, and reach. Ballston Spa is certainly a place we’d love to see again.”

Dan Masucci, writer/director of this year’s contender, Beneath the Same Sky commented, “What great venues and events and the gift bag was the best I’ve gotten – gotta love brownies, popcorn, and a candy bar. Seriously that’s the kind of stuff that is really cool. The tee shirt and cup were icing on the goodie bag cake. I love that you build up quite an audience. It is one of the better attended festivals I’ve been too. It was an honor to be shown among so many great films.”

Charlie Lyons, a doctor of theater and film from Columbia, and former film reporter for Variety and the NY Times, as well as one of the favorites for this year's best film, also commented on the quality of his competition this year. "I thought Signs was the best film. It was one of the best short films I've ever seen!"

Signs did indeed steal the show – along with three of the top prizes. Winners included:

Best Picture: Patrick Hughes for "Signs" (Australia)
